Marienbad is the second-largest spa town in the Czech Republic with 13,000 inhabitants and 7,600 hotel beds. It's located on the edge of the Slavkovský Forest at over 600m above sea level and enjoys a subalpine climate. The town is best-known for its mineral-rich springs – there are over 100 of them in the area, around 40 in the town itself. Visitors cannot fail to be impressed by the town's many parks, strikingly beautiful natural setting and the grand architecture of the spa houses. In addition to neo-Renaissance buildings you'll also encounter neo-Classicist, neo-Baroque and Art Nouveau elements. Marienbad is one of the eleven European spa towns applying for inclusion on UNESCO's list of world cultural heritage sites.

HISTORY:

A young town with a rich history

HISTORY: A young town with a rich history

1820 - 1870

Supported financially by Abbot Karel Kašpar Reitenberger, the landscape gardener Václav Skalník, architect Jiří Fischer and builder Anton Turner transformed an inhospitable, marshy valley into a beautiful spa town sporting neo-Classical and Empire facades, gazebos, pavilions and colonnades. Skalník's urban design has mostly survived intact to this day.

Many important personalities of the day from the worlds of culture, science and politics paid the town a visit. These included Goethe, Chopin, Wagner, Bruckner and Prince Friedrich of Saxony to name just a few.

On 29. 5. 1865 Emperor Franz Joseph I granted Marienbad official town status.

GOLDEN ERA

Marienbad's heyday came between 1870 and 1914 and this can still be seen in the numerous neo-Classical and Art Nouveau spa buildings, hotels, colonnades and churches, many the work of architects such as Zickler, Schaffer, Heymann and Forberich. The spa parks were expanded and idyllic viewing points created in the surrounding hills. In 1872 the town was linked by railway to Cheb, Vienna and Prague (via Pilsen) and in 1898 with Carlsbad. It was at this time that the number of illustrious guests reached its peak. These included Mahler, Nietzsche, Kafka, Kipling, Twain, Edison, de Coubertin, King Edward VII of England and Emperor Franz Joseph I.

20TH CENTURY

The spa continued to attract many visitors in the first half of the 20th century – these included important dignitaries such as politicians T. G. Masaryk and Edvard Beneš. In 1927 the newly-built airport in nearby Skláře meant that Marienbad was even better linked to the outside world.

During WWII Marienbad became a military hospital town. At the end of WWII further development took place and the first housing estates and recreational facilities for the population appeared. In 1952 eco-friendly trolleybuses were introduced. Despite these changes, Marienbad has maintained its unique spa town character.

MARIENBAD'S SPRINGS:

Curative power of the springs

SPA TREATMENT

The spa treatments in Marienbad mostly depend on naturally occurring sources of water. Tens of mineral-rich springs bubble to the surface in a relatively small area within the town's borders. However, their chemical composition differs considerably, an interesting geological phenomenon. This means that Marienbad can offer a range of treatments for a wide variety of conditions –kidney and urinary disease, respiratory complaints, musculoskeletal problems, metabolic disorders, digestive system complaints and nerve and skin conditions. The water temperature ranges from 7° to 10° C, making these officially 'cold' mineral water sources.

CROSS (KŘÍŽOVÝ) SPRING

This spring water is used to treat digestive system disorders and allergies associated with digestive problems. Possesses a high mineral content and has a laxative effect.

FERDINAND SPRING

This spring water is suitable for treating digestive system ailments and metabolic problems. Has a strong salty taste and a high mineral content.

AMBROŽ SPRINGS

This water has a low mineral content but does contain high iron levels. Can help with some forms of anaemia and in the treatment of urological illnesses.

KAROLÍNA SPRING

The water from this spring contains high amounts of magnesium and is used to treat urological illnesses and kidney stones.

FOREST SPRING

Suitable for easing various digestive problems, upper respiratory problems and used to treat certain urological conditions.

RUDOLF SPRING

Natural mineral spring with a high calcium content, used to treat kidney disease and urinary tract issues. Possesses anti-inflammatory effects and is used to ease urinary infections.

BALBÍN SPRING

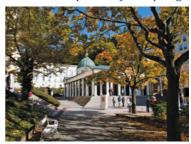

This spring was once called the Peat Bog Spring as it rises on the edge of a peat bog around a kilometre to the west of Marienbad heading towards the village of Valy. It is now piped to a tap opposite the Hotel Bohemia.

TOP TIP:

Visit the springs on a guided tour organised by the Marien-bad Information Centre.

In the early days of the spa it was called Větrový or Aeolský, as it's said it caused slight bloating ('větrový' means 'windy' in Czech!). Only in 1828 was it renamed Forest Spring. The water is used in drinking cures where it emerges from the ground.

Goethe was a big fan of the Czech Lands. In 1823 the poet arrived in Bohemia for the last time, staying in Marienbad at a house called "U Zlatého hroznu", today home to the Municipal Museum. The rooms he occupied now host a permanent exhibition examining Goethe's relationship to Marienbad and the time he spent here.
